SFMOMA Minna & Natoma Street Windows Post an Event »

In this collaborative art installation by photographer Ari Salomon and sculptor Andy Vogt, each artist relies on a systematic process to create large-scale abstract artworks. Salomon experiments with found-lighting situations to reveal hints of what is all around us but hidden by the limits of perception. Vogt transforms found-wood lath strips into architectural and geological constructions, and these new structural meditations examine how time and materials intersect with our perception of place. Both artists explore the concept of building abstractions of reality in order to bring another kind of reality into focus. Where: On view 24/7 in the street-level window displays down the alleyways on either side of the museum (on the SFMOMA parking garage behind the main building). The Minna Street Windows are directly across the alley from Catherine Clark and Baer Ridgeway galleries (who will be having opening receptions at the same time). Learn more: <http://www.sfmoma.org>
